The Journey from Quality Improvement to Pragmatic Trials: Towards a Learning Health Care System

Cheryl Bushnell, MD, MHS

Professor, Neurology

Using stroke as an example, this presentation will describe how a quality improvement program focused on discharge materials for education and follow-up calls for patients with stroke can evolve into an effective mechanism for informing research and clinical practice. The model initially targeted reduced 30-day readmissions, and is now a pragmatic trial that is focused on patient-centered outcomes, such as functional status.
